SU exec indicted in mail order SCROLL scam

SU vp David Tuper inviting everyone over to his place for cookies and kool-aid after he was indicted for petition fraud Monday. His business manager and spiritual channeller Ozzie Osborne (pictured right) said Tuper could face a severe spanking or be banished to his bedroom.

by Getaway staff

Students' Union vp external, Dave Tuper, was indicted Monday on charges of selling signatures from the SCROLL campaign to a telephone solicitation company.

Tuper has been charged with soliciting a petition under false pretenses, a criminal offense under section 108-A of the Criminal Code of Canada.

The indictment came as a result of a complaint by a student who was solicited on the phone by the Acme vibrator company.

The student made the complaint to the Edmonton City Police who found the list of names from the SCROLL campaign after a search of Acme's files. Constable Friday of Strathcona division said "the names looked suspicious because they were hand written."

We have not ruled out the possibility of reefer madness."

"I am not a crook," Tuper said, adding, "just ask my dad."

SU president Paul LeGrange was surprised and disappointed in the charges, saying, "I'm surprised and disappointed. Perhaps it was... SATAN, yes I'm sure it must have been... SATAN."

Tuper's preliminary hearing will be next week. the maximum penalty Tuper is expected to receive is to be banished to his room.

HUBland to happen here

by D.R. Claw

HUB Mall has been sold to a well known Edmonton development company who will begin major renovations starting in January.

The mall has been bought by Triple Jive corporation for $1 plus automatic take over of all costs and operating loans.

Triple Jive is a development company run by the Lizardian brothers, Huey, Duey, and Louie. Company spokesman Huey Lizardian said that Triple Jive's plans for the mall are to develop it into "one big theme park with retail shopping and fine restaurants too."

Phase I of the Funhouse plan calls for a design based on an obstacle course. Lizardian explained that people will be required to start at one end of the mall and try to make it to the other end without getting killed or lost.

One idea is to have the participant put on wet footwear and walk on the new tiles without

Alien prof replaces prez

by Ziggy Poop

After Dr. Paul Chesterfield, the new president elect of the University of Alberta, failed to pass the notorious English competency exam, the Board of Governors moved quickly to find another qualified applicant. They chose Dr. Roy Vermandez, a distinguished foreign professor.

Vermandez did not comment on what university he comes from, only that it is "quite some distance from Edmonton." He did provide several excellent letters of reference written in a strange, as yet unidentified language.

Vermandez spoke to The Getaway and revealed several points of his plan to revitalize the U of A's academic programs.

"We'll be phasing out the inferior races, such as Caucasian immigrants from the United States, in an effort to create a "master class" of students suitable to rule — er — serve the entire world," he said.

Vermandez also has plans to restrict freedom of movement on campus.

This could elicit considerable backlash from the student population, but the new president plans to beef up Campus Security by having pit bulls accompany security personnel on patrol.

"I hope to give Campus Security a greater role in gathering public support for my changes," Vermandez said.

Dr. Vermandez, the new foreign president of the U of A, likes late evening celestial walks.

AIDs rolls news staff

The AIDS epidemic reached tragic proportions this week with the death of all seven Getaway editors falling victim to the deadly disease within minutes of each other.

A spokesman for the Getaway said there would be no inquiry into the deaths although the coroner's preliminary report states in no uncertain terms that the seven were systematically run over by a steaming locomotive in the hallways of second floor SUB.

This would seem to suggest that the deaths were either accidental or a result of a news-related genocide.

However, the spokesman was adamant about the cause of death.

"It's AIDS I tell you. The damn kids today just don't listen. They go around with their stereos and their tancy cars. It's a scourge from God."

Families of the victims say they will sue both the University of Alberta Students' Union and the Canadian Railway. The lawsuit states that there should never have been a steaming locomotive in the hallways of SUB not to mention the second floor. And besides, there's no such thing as steaming locomotives anymore anyway, so what business do they have being on a University campus.

The Getaway will temporarily be operated out of the SUB Theatre washroom. There is not expected to be any substantial drop in the quality of the newspaper, although some students have expressed concern that the papers editorial policy may portray a shitty attitude toward campus life.

There are no pit bulls in this story

by Charles Wankermann

After an all-night sitting of the Legislature Wednesday, the Alberta government has decided to provide 100 percent remission on all Student Loans.

"This is a tremendous opportunity for the students of Alberta universities," said Barry Chunder of the Students' Finance Board. "For those who qualify for student loans in the province, this amounts to a virtually free education."

The remission decision is one aspect of provincial Bill E-87 which calls for a restructuring of the province's student finance system.

Under the new law, "all loans will now be remitted fully, retroactive from September 1987," according to Chunder, who added that in the past, "student loans were remitted between 10 and 60 percent, with no remission after two years of financial assistance."

The bill was introduced early in November by the Hon. Chuck Cavanaugh member for the Compost riding.

After an initial response of outright denial, the Government voted last night in favor of the bill, after much heated debate.

"We decided that after all of the [post-secondary] students' whining and obsequiousness, ad nauseum, with petitions and so forth, to give them a break," said Nancy Fellatori, a spokesperson for the Minister of Advanced Education.

Grapevine

University of Alberta security officers and Edmonton city animal control officers charged Cornilious Shmemngel with cruelty to animals after the student tied a miniature parachute to his pet rabbit, and dropped it from a tenth story window of Lister Hall, his university dormitory.

"The rodent became lodged in a tree," said chief security officer Joe Friday. "Shmemngel and his friends tried to free it by throwing snowballs at it most of the night."

Fire department officials finally used a ladder-truck to free the estranged rodent, which was taken to the nearby U of A Hospital and is reported as doing fine.

Ear pickers plucked from campus

On January 1, new regulations will come into effect banning "socially unacceptable behaviors pertaining to natural bodily functions" from all buildings and parts of buildings governed by the university.

Until now, there has never been any established policy, even tacitly, for dealing with such violators. But under the new ruling, students who are caught, for example, belching or sculpting earwax while in university buildings are now punishable under the Code of Student Behavior. The resolution had been passed by the board of governors on September 29, but was kept quiet until the controversy over the non-smoking regulation had subsided.

In preparation for the required transition period, designated nose- and scab-picking areas have already been provisionally established in CAB and the Business/Tory Lecture complex, as well as on the first floor of Cameron Library.

Despite attempts to avoid further student unrest, the policy has nonetheless elicited an immediate response because of its vagueness and wide-ranging implications. Representatives from both Freedom For Flatulence and Students Supporting Social Spitting have already declared their opposition to the new policy.

According to FFF rep Gus Leek, "this policy represents yet another infringement on the students' rights. First, they took smoke out of the atmosphere. Now gas too?" Adds SSSS member Fly N. Drool, "Yeah!"

A physical plant worker, who refused to identify himself, also complained that, in addition to cigarette butts littering building doorways, there would be "those damned frozen boogers to scrape off the sidewalk."

Contacts within Occupational Health and Safety have responded by saying that students and staff were surveyed early in the year before the policy was accepted. They are not expecting any major problems despite the fact that this is the first such policy to be implemented anywhere in North America.

slipping. "The idea," Lizardian laughed, "is not to fall down and break your tailbone." Participants will also have to avoid other dangerous obstacles like tables, chairs, and man eating plants, as well as exotic animals such as rats and raccoons.

The biggest obstacle to overcome, according to Lizardian, will be the hordes of rabid, rampant students that will sweep through the mall every class change, "sort of like a human wave pool," Lizardian said.

Lizardian also said other developments will be forthcoming. "In Phase II, all the HUB residences will be converted to theme rooms," he said, stressing the point that the theme of each room will reflect the ambience of the University. Some theme rooms to be included are the 'chem lab' room, the 'library room', and the 'Frat room'.

Lizardian hopes the Frat room will become the most popular. "The decor will include food splattered wall paper, lamp shades made of dirty underwear and socks, and beat up, overstuffed furniture," he said, adding, "Our guests will be looked after by our fleet of overstuffed, beat up students from the recreation department."

According to Lizardian, there will be a Phase III beginning next summer. The plan calls for a complete renovation of Dewey's Pub into a nightclub to be called 'Goose Duey's'. "My brother Duey really liked that name," said Lizardian.

The finalized version of the club will also have a theme. Said Lizardian, "The club will be relationships in the 90's. The interior of the club will be painted black and there will be no lights. Customers will be given flashlights and will have to grope around in the dark and try to find one another."

Lizardian would not comment on any other mall developments, but The Getaway has learned that Triple Jive has plans to install an LRT station in the mall. As well, the company also intends to set up four McDonalds restaurants in the mall.

When asked how Triple Jive was able to obtain the purchase of HUB and approval for development, Lizardian would only say, "We know terrorists in high places."

Cafeterias to sell booze for stress relief

by A.B. Foyer

Commencing in January, students will be able to purchase a varied assortment of beers and coolers from Cab and Lister cafeterias and the Orange County Booths.

The announcement came yesterday from Housing and Slop Services Director David Brunch. Brunch said Housing and Slop decided to expand their menus to include alcoholic beverage because of all the complaints they've been getting about the quality of their service.

"We know that students suffer through a lot of stress, what with all their assignments, exams, and readings," said Brunch. Brunch feels one of the best ways to relieve stress is by "tossing back a few cold ones."

Brunch hopes the new service will make up for some of things students have been complaining about, like higher prices and discontinued hot breakfasts.

"We truly do want to serve the students as best as possible," said Brunch, adding that he hoped students would appreciate what Housing and Slop is doing for them.

In the new year, the liquor service will run Monday to Friday from noon until six.

The Truth as We See It

Scandal
Matters

Satan
Claus

"War is Peace". Orwell's enigmatic message haunts me at this time of year, filling my thoughts like mincemeat fills an Xmas tart.

The reason is of course Santa Claus. "He knows when you've been sleeping, he knows when you're awake"; so who can sleep with some fat little man snooping into your private life?

The facts in the case are admittedly few, but Lee Harvey Oswald actually ordered his sniper's rifle not from a gunshop in the American midwest, but from on "S. Claus, Special Armaments and Information Broker, The North Pole". If this man indeed knows if you've been naughty or nice, he must have been part of the plot to assassinate John Fitzgerald Kennedy.

Kennedy's death is not the only crime which Claus must answer for. "The Cubans" of Watergate were actually Santa's "elves", as was Ollie North's mysterious Syrian contact.

Claus' continuing freedom can only be the result of one thing: his ingenious advertising campaign, which he has been involved in for as long as anyone can remember. He is not as he is usually portrayed — a friendly little man drinking a popular carbonated beverage, or exchanging hearty banter with one Ebenezer Scrooge. He is instead the Devil his ownself.

The fact that we missed the connection is attributable to the clever media manipulation of Claus himself. His image has been so skillfully masked that no one suspects that a man who lives forever without aging — a man dressed in red (the color of the flames in Hell... and Calgary) — is actually Satan.

Such is the gall of the man that he has barely even disguised his nicknames: "Old Nick", "Saint Nick". They're the same being.

This man is even more of a threat in today's technological society, and it was this fact that George Orwell was trying to warn us of in his book 1984. "Big Brother" is just another name for Beelzebub, bub. With the spy satellites launched today — like the one sent up in the space shuttle "Atlantis" this week — vulnerable as they are to signal tapping, the monster know as "Santy", and his "elves" technological wizardry, know everything there is to know about every person in the world.

So you better not shout, you better not cry, you better not pout, and I'm telling you why... Big Brother's watching you.

God grief

Would you please tell all the religious zealots to stop bragging about how they're going to heaven? Because, frankly, we've got enough problems up here already.

Ever since the United Church began allowing ordination of homosexuals, the angels have been threatening to go on strike. And frankly, I don't blame them.

Then, of course, we've got all the elderly followers of American televangelists dropping like flies and assuming they're going to get in because they gave money to Jim Falker. The trouble is, they don't realize that all the money went up his nose, rather than here. Why do you think I asked Orally for that $8 million anyway? It's not easy balancing a budget these days with nothing to export but faith and the odd batch of ecstasy.

There's also my son. He's been moping around like a martyr for the last 2000 years or so and whining about not getting laid. Well, if immaculate conception was good enough for me, it should be for him too. I told him to find a virgin and have her artificially inseminated, but is that good enough for him? Nooo.

Just one more thing. If I don't get some publishing royalties from the Bible soon, there is going to be big trouble. We're talking pestilence, plague and famine here, so don't even think about fucking me around. After all, it's the world's best-selling book, right? I should get something, shouldn't I?

Oh yeah, have a merry Christmas.
Sincerely,
God

Better latex than never

I've had it up to here with all this bullshit about the AIDS hazard involved with casual sex. How is a guy supposed to find some action these days with all the girls worrying about, first, getting pregnant, and now about getting AIDS.

Before this stupid AIDS scare, it was hard enough finding a nice-looking, willing girl who was on the pill.

Other girls were willing, but because they weren't on the pill and were worried about getting pregnant, they expected ME to wear a CONDOM.

All they cared about was themselves, and had absolutely no concern for my satisfaction. They didn't even know what it was like to wear one, and imagine, having the nerve to ask me to.

Now, with this silly AIDS thing, girls who take the pill and aren't worried about getting pregnant are worried about getting AIDS. And so the bitches expect me to wear a rubber! How dare they! They all want me to sacrifice my pleasure, just because of this absurd disease.

When I told this one chick I picked up that I wouldn't use one, she said to me, "It's better latex than never, pal."

Needless to say, I had a cold shower that night.

C'mon guys, let's band together. This AIDS thing is ridiculous. I know I won't get it. You won't get it. The whole thing is just a farce to make us revert back to old, boring values.

Let's start our own movement towards a revival of the exhilarating, satisfying one-night stand.

Meaning of life clarified

I'm sick of it. I'm sick and tired of picking up The Getaway and having other people's opinions shoved down my throat. Now don't get me wrong, I like a good Getaway as much as the next person, but I feel compelled to object when people spout off their views on everything from religion (gag!) to Lady Godiva's bouncing boobs (yah, man!). So, in the future, I suggest that everybody just stick to the facts, i.e. Godiva is a babe, Jesus is a myth, and Engineers are goofs. Thank you for the opportunity to set a number of misconceptions which have been running rampant in The Getaway straight.

Another letter from God

Re: every letter ever written in this godforsaken paper

I've seen an awful lot of letters in this paper, and every one has been written by hedonists, idiots, religious nuts, or whiny wimp students. I'm sick of it. I want to end all the controversy and bickering by saying there is only one opinion, and frankly, I have it.

That's right, I am the allknowing, the allseeing, and I'm always right. I don't ever want to see another letter unless you clear it with me first. No, don't do that, just don't bother me with your petty opinions, you're all insignificant plebians.

Just remember that because I exist, your empty little lives will have a shred of meaning.

That obnoxious guy who always argues with the prof so the whole class won't get to leave 2 minutes early.

Fun times at the bar

by Koosa Morolson

It was a hilarious day. I woke up and hit my head on the roof. Silly me! I was sleeping under the bed again.

I brushed my teeth. 40 strokes on each tooth. I counted them. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, well you get the picture.

I ate breakfast. Eggs again. It was about time I learned to make waffles. I had a waffle once, at a Smitty's restaurant, when I was four. My mom says I got whipped cream on my nose. Oh, what a lark.

I decided to skip class and went to the bar instead. I've become quite a heavy drinker since I started writing for The Getaway. They're all a bunch of drunks. Unfortunately, when I start drinking, I have to pee a lot. This means running back and forward to the washroom every five minutes. The people with the table right by the washroom must have thought something was wrong with me.

We ate pizza at the bar. Since I started drinking, my diet has gone downhill. I never have as much energy as I used to, and I frequently find myself dozing off while driving, eating, or making love. Quite embarrassing, eh?

We all went back to my place and had a few more beers sitting in front of the TV. At least here I didn't have to keep getting up to go pee. I just sat there and wet the furniture. You expend less energy that way.

I passed out about 5 am, after watching an old black and white movie on TV. I don't remember what it was about, or who was in it. I only remember that we ordered another pizza during it. Kiwi and Anchovie. My favorite flavour. By the time it arrived I wasn't hungry anymore, so I put it with the rest of my groceries—in the middle of the living room floor. I really must clean up this place some day.

Let this be a lesson to you. If you live the same lifestyle that I do, you'll become just like me. And we wouldn't want that, would we?

Canadian Rock History Challenge by Labatt's

The group began in 1985 in Newmarket, Ontario. Their first album entitled "The Thin Red Line" was released in February, 1986 and did spectacular things for the group both in Canada and abroad. The album sold over one million copies worldwide and over 500,000 copies in the U.S. alone. Two of the singles released in the U.S. went "Top Ten" and the band received a "Grammy" nomination as "Best New Artist" in the U.S. In Canada, five singles were released from the first album. The first single, "Don't Forget Me" went platinum (over 100,000 copies), and another entitled "Someday" went gold (over 50,000 copies). The band also received four Juno nominations in Canada for their first album effort.

Recorded in the fall of 1987, the group's second album "Diamond Sun" was released in May, 1988. From this album the first single "I'm Still Searching" went gold in Canada and the second single, the title track, was very close to gold as well. The third release from this album was called "My Song" a traditional sounding song recorded in Dublin, Ireland complete with tin pipes backup provided by the Irish folk group "The Chieftains". This single is also doing very well so far.

The band anticipates the release of yet more singles from this second effort and is currently on a world tour which includes such exotic places as the U.S., Europe, Japan, and Australia. We'll be looking for more good things from this incredible Canadian rock group in the near future.

Truly Artsy Pretentious Bullshit

Spyder casts his web over modern dance scene

by Rosehips Jacqueen

Getaway: How long have you been dancing?

Spyder Web: Oh, forever. Ever since I was in the womb. I didn't kick, I did jetes! I was actually born on stage during a performance of Swan Pond. My mother must have transferred her passion to me during the dying scene, because I just popped right out and pirouetted across the stage!

Getaway: Gosh.

Spyder Web: Yes, it was a tad too much for some of the audience. But, like I always say, if they can't appreciate art, that's their problem. Personally, I find the juxtaposition of birth and death truly profound.

Getaway: So you believe in creating art for its own sake, then?

Spyder Web: No. Did I say that? I only create art for one purpose, and that's money. What other purpose is there?

Getaway: To entertain? To inform?

Spyder Web: (Silence)

Getaway: So, when did you begin your formal dance training?

Spyder Web: Formal?... Formal?... I don't understand...

Getaway: When did you start taking classes?

Spyder Web: Oh, classes. I studied with Barishishkabob and Nijerksky when I was just a toddler. They taught me a few steps, but it wasn't until I was five years old that I discovered real dance — I mean, the only kind that counts.

Getaway: (Pause) And what kind is that?

Spyder Web: (Long, drawn out shocked gasp) Modern! Didn't you know that?

Getaway: Where did you study modern dance?

Spyder Web: One doesn't study modern dance. It's a much deeper, purer experience than that. One absorbs modern dance. I spent years absorbing modern dance.

Getaway: Who did you absorb it from?

Spyder Web: Oh, I don't remember. Nobody important. Nobody as important as I am now, anyhow!

Getaway: Tell me about your upcoming show.

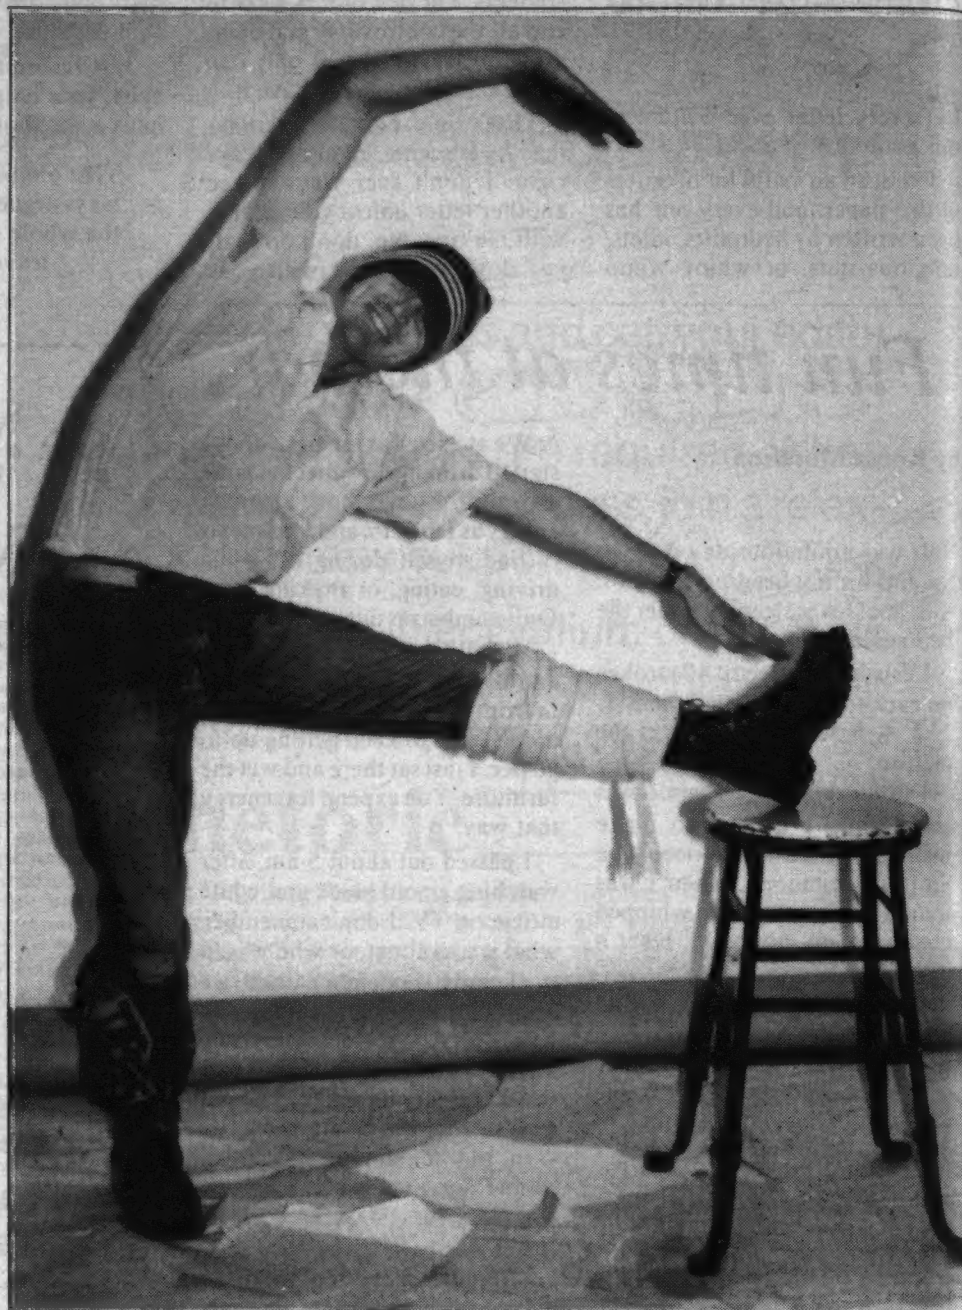

Spyder Web: Well, in the first number, I take off all my clothes and dance. Then, in the second number, I dance in the nude. In the third number, I dance, and I'm naked! Then, following that, I dance wearing only my birthday suit. It's reminiscent of my early days on stage at the ballet. After that, I don't put any clothes back on, and I...

Getaway: I see. Do you explore any particular themes?

Spyder Web: Oh, yes, very diverse themes. The first number is an exploration of people's self-consciousness about their own bodies. The second is an exploration of people's unhappiness with the way they look. The third number is...

Getaway: It sounds very interesting. Do you think it will appeal to a very wide audience?

Spyder Web: Definitely. People should see this show because it will open their minds. Well, if it doesn't, they're closed minded and I don't care about them. As long as they pay their money to get in...

Modern dancer Spyder Web shows off the winning form he hopes will make him obscene amounts of money soon, or at least eventually.

by Camembert McCheese

In a non-scheduled stop on their whirlwind tour to save the universe, Bangladesh rock group U3 descended on the Edmonton rock scene last Friday and delighted thousands of fans by playing an impromptu concert on the doorstep of City Hall.

Frenzied fans jostled with one another around the Cenotaph in order to catch a better glimpse of the band, which was led, as usual, by Bonehead at his charismatic best.

The group rendered most of their hits for the adoring crowd, and even threw in a cover version of "I'd Like To Teach The World To Sing", which included a searing guitar solo by lead axe-man the Hedge, so named for his green-tinted hair which is usually sculpted into a box.

Bonehead often interrupted the songs with long speeches about how he'd written a song once while attending a roadside restroom ("Feel Like Shit But Nobody Feels Sorrier For Me Than Myself") and while slaving away at a summer roofing job in the summer of '85 ("I'm Hot, But Sex Takes A Back Seat to Feeding the Hungry"). This proselytizing often detracted from the continuity of the show, but most people didn't seem to mind.

Sheeri Naive, a grade 12 student here in the city said, "not only are they cuter than Shaun Cassidy, but they have a message too."

In an interview after the concert, Bonehead said he was happy his message seemed to be getting through to the kids. "I'd like to think there is more to music than a beat and danceability. What we in U3 are trying to do is save the world just a little bit more than we did on the previous album. That way, if we stick around long enough we will end world hunger, spearhead nuclear disarmament, and maybe even get to the bottom of this Elvis thing if we're lucky."

U3 are next scheduled to appear at the Edson Agriplex on Dec. 10 to play a charity gig for the now nearly extinct Rocky Mountain Goat. Then it's on to Calgary on the eleventh of this month to save that city from itself.

ESO to give up classical music for rock in rejuvenation

by Patsy Huggens

Bambi Busty, new publicity director for the Edmonton Sloppy Orchestra, announced the orchestra's new season today in a gala press conference at the Purple Onion. In a surprise move, the orchestra fired its entire current corps of players and hired a local rock band to replace them.

As Bambi explained, "this move was really necessary because our audience has been slowly dying off over the last few years. Either that, or they can't stay awake during our performances."

The orchestra will also give up its current musical diet of Mozart, Beethoven and Brahms for a somewhat more contemporary repertoire. "We feel that the music of great groups like Iggy & the Stooges, the Sex Pistols and the Monkees is the classical music of the future. This will bring us the larger audience we need to generate the revenue to build a really cosmic light show," said Bambi.

Along with the changes in personnel, the orchestra will abandon their rather outmoded stage fashions, substituting required stage dress of spandex and fishnet stockings for the traditional black tie and tails. Mohawks and bright hair colours will also help to liven up the orchestra's onstage appearance.

ESO conductor Useless Mieir will also get the boot. He will be replaced with the hot young composer and saxophonist James Lerner, of Edmonton. The Getaway contacted Lerner, who had not yet been informed of his appointment. Upon learning the good news, however, Lerner's reaction was subdued: "Really? Oh wow, man. What a bunch of fags." He then began cackling hysterically and had to be restrained by three music professors.

The Getaway also contacted several of the outgoing players. Ex-concertmaster Jiminy Keener was not amused: "It's completely preposterous. I'll have to play chamber music now," he sniffed.

Bambi expects the orchestra's new look and sound to be a hit, but not with everyone. "Oh sure, there will probably be a few boring old farts cancelling their subscriptions," she said, "but I say fuck 'em if they can't take a joke."

The Pursuit of Happiness: will the expatriate Edmonton band become the new Edmonton Sloppy Orchestra?

Sprout shows he can still germinate after Blimp crashes

Bobby Sprout
Northlands Bunker
Tuesday, December 6

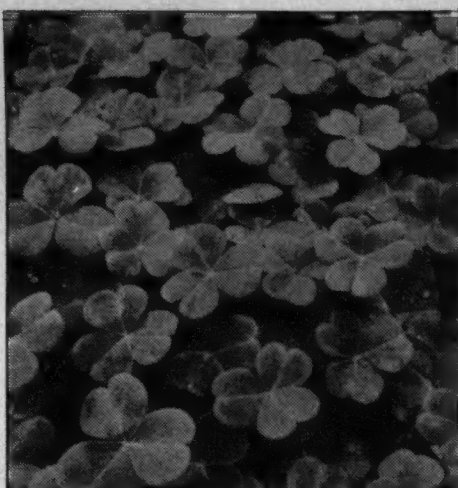

review by Mikey

Aging houseplant-cum-rocker Bobby Sprout brought his dazzling array of foliage to the Bunker Tuesday night for a show that displayed many of his recent growths to full advantage as well as revisiting the well-known hits of his former band, the Big Blimp.

Sprout was in fine form throughout the show, wriggling his trunk in time to the music and shaking his long flowing leaves, which showed no signs of underwatering or mineral deficiencies, just like he did when he was a young English Sprout.

The sold-out crowd in the Bunker was behind Sprout all the way, although their constant demands for old Blimp hits became rather nauseating at times, as did the smells of the various weeds they were ingesting throughout the show to display their solidarity with Sprout, who didn't seem to be offended in the least by this wanton destruction of his fellow foliage.

The stage was decorated in tasteful earth-tones, offset by a large circular screen which split into many smaller circles, representing the light of the sun and the regeneration of plant life through compost heaps. Onto this backdrop was projected apocalyptic images of forest fires, lumberjacks wielding large chainsaws and over-trimmed and underwatered houseplants of various kinds.

An in-concert photo of the top of Bobby Sprout's head. Denied photo access, our photographer was forced to resort to dubious means to obtain this picture, taken from the catwalks of the Bunker.

The lighting was also sympathetic, emphasizing the full range of the colour spectrum, although an overabundance of infrared rays toward the end of the show had Sprout and his sidemen wilting slightly.

Musically, the show ran the gamut of Sprout's long career, including hits like "Topsoil Breakdown" from the first Blimp album, "In The Sunlight" from Chlorophyll Graffiti and more recent favourites like "Ship of Roots" and "Tall Shady One".

A particularly poignant moment occurred when Sprout set down his roots to perform a moving version of "Growing in California", his famous ode to that ideal climate for houseplants. After applauding the first chords of the song loudly, the crowd settled down to hear the quiet rustling of the guitar strings.

The response to this song was typical of the preference the audience displayed for both old Blimp songs and green plant life. In response, Sprout performed songs from every Blimp album except for Water Through the Drain Hole and Houses of the Holly.

Turf Momma Offa da Bus: da Musical
Jubilee Auditorium
Sunday, December 4

review by Sandal Ratters

The cast of Turf Momma Offa da Bus scored a big win on Sunday night before a crowd of several thousand people at the Jubilee

Charles opted for the GQ look, in blazer and jeans...

Auditorium.

The second line had a big night, as Chiffon, Crystal, and Ronette repeatedly came out of nowhere to score song lyrics like body blows. Just like a good boxer, they'd get in, connect, and get back out again.

The first squad weren't shut out, however. Owen (Vito de Danny) and Momma

This was Sprout's first appearance in Edmonton since the Blimp first crash-landed here way back in 1970. He appears to have steadily grown new shoots during that period, although the bark around his older branches has grown a little thicker. But, as Sprout showed clearly at the Bunker Tuesday night, he can still photosynthesize with the best of them.

(Ram Antsy) were especially effective. The two connected for a major with "The Girl Sure Looks Like Tread Food To Me" as a duet, and they tallied unassisted with "Splish Splash (She Was Takin' a Drown)" and "Owen Yer a Ween" respectively.

Unappreciated but essential, like good defence in hockey, were Apollo Creed as the bus driver, and the band — Paul Papermate, G.E. Electric, and Buster Chops.

The evening was also a major social event. Seen in the crowd were SU types Charlie Vee-delt and David Upperty. Charles opted for the GQ look, in blazer and jeans, while David sported a natty black and white sweater. Later, Romantic Lit. prof. Dr. Naim Redu was also seen — with a young lady who was not his wife. The mystery girl sported a daring blue dress which was tres decolletage, and a darling hat and glove set from the Jackie Shop at Holt Renfrew.

Overall, the evening would have to rate a smashing success.

To Drink or Not

To study, or not to study — that is the question

Medical trivia: Little bits and pieces of Fred and Ginger

by Fred and Ginger

It happens all the time. You think everything is going great, when, all of a sudden, problem diarrhoea. And of course, you never know what disease it is that you have — it could be the flu, or the bubonic plague. Well, we want to test your knowledge of what comes out of your body — either end. So this week's topic is, you guessed it, vomit and excrement. The winning entry will win a year's supply of Pepto-Bismol.

But first, the answer's to last week's quiz, Fred and Ginger's body parts:

1. The spleen is large and red.
2. This is the proper name for that hangy-down thing at the back of your throat.
3. This was a trick question — the correct answer is the anus. Too bad for anyone who said the adam's apple.
4. The average length of a penis is 13 inches. Anyone with less should feel inadequate and not reproduce.
5. Most people have two buttocks.
6. The substance available on the streets that best passes the blood-brain barrier is LSD.
7. No, you cannot put your nose into your own ear.
8. On this campus, the best solution to an ingrown toenail is to rub a CAB Cinnamon bun on it, and to leave the toes stuck together for at least two weeks.

When he himself might tell everyone where to get off
After a few beers? Who would knapsacks bear.
To grunt and sweat under a weary load,
But that the dread of working at McDonalds,
The underpaid country, from whose zits

9. We admit, we don't know the answer to this question. Why do you have little horizontal lines on every knuckle except the one at the base of your thumb?

10. A little known fact — your eyeballs are really the size of footballs and fill your entire skull.

Tie Breaker: To perform a quintuple bypass on yourself, cut open the skin below the fifth rib with a horizontal cut. Spread the ribs with a vise-grip available at Home Hardware ($14.95). Pull the heart out gently. DO NOT cut the aorta. Find the largest cardiac arteries and replace them with thin plastic tubes, or rolled up dollar bills. Glue in place with Emery extra strong yellow glue. Replace heart. Count your sponges. Staple skin shut and pour vodka liberally over the incision. Treat yourself to a night out on the town as a celebration.

Shelly Leech got all the questions right, but we aren't going to give her a prize because she doesn't enter every week and has never won before, not like the normal riff-raff that gets all our prizes. So there! Nyah, nyah, nyah.

And now this week's question:

1. What disease do you have if your excrement is crystal clear with undigested asparagus spears embedded deep inside?
2. Why, after you've been on a drinking binge, does your vomit always have diced carrots in it?

3. If everything that came out of your body in one year was gathered up and put on a scale, wouldn't it look disgusting?

4. What colour is your urine if you have diblengoffstorosis?

5. True or False? The colon is directly connected to the nostrils, so inhaling too deeply gives you gas!

6. True or False? Condoms cause impotence by cutting off circulation until the penis turns purple and falls off!

7. A thick, translucent green slime collecting in the base of the throat is an indication of what popular disease?

8. Give all the symptoms of Bofferentis.

9. If you have diarrhoea that runs constantly for over twelve hours, should you take dexamethasone for it?

10. How do you spell diarrhoea? We really don't know, and couldn't find it in the dictionary. The way we have it spelled, it could be pronounced. Die-hoary-hi-ho-hay!

Tie Breaker: What is the best method of breaking ties? We've tried hitting them with a hammer, but they just bend, or fall off the table.

Well, that's it! Another column finished. God, we hate doing this. We're only in it for the money! What? You mean we don't get paid for this? Why does no-one tell us? Just wait till we get our hands on that editor!!

Fuck You!

No worker recovers, puzzles the will,
And makes us rather bear these exams we have
Than fly to RATT to look for Candi and Bambi?
Thus fear of working for $4.25/hour does make students of us all,

And thus the native hue of December
Is sicklied o'er with a lot of Java Jive,
And excursions of great pitch and promise
With this regard their currents turn to Rutherford
And lose the name of action. i.e. (until December 17 — see you at RATT!)

U of A sends coaches for cash

by Jerry Mathers

Drowning in a sea of red ink, the U of A Golden Bears hockey team has to "dispose of our most valuable asset," according to Dr. Bob, Athletics chairman.

In order to finance an upcoming trip to Lethbridge, the team sold the contract of longtime coach Clear Lake to the Minnesota North Stars for $10,000 cash.

"Yeah, well we kept hearing these rumors about Clear retiring, so we figured we should get rid of him while he still had some value," said Dr. Bob. "Actually, it was the Gretzky trade that gave us the idea."

Lake was unavailable for comment, but is rumored to be somewhat upset at the idea. "It's not so much getting sold that bothered him," said a family friend, who asked remain anonymous, "but he was really hoping the new team's colors wouldn't be green and gold."

The team members are contemplating a holdout in protest of the mood. "I came here to play for Coach Lake," said star rookie Doug McMimac, "and halfway through the season, they ship him out. I'm really mad."

The worst part, according to team captain Sid Cramsome, is Lake's replacement. "I don't want to be seen as hostile to the new coach," he said, "but I'm not sure GUBA's fully qualified."

The familiar giant bear will not only be coaching, but maintaining his job as mascot. "Mmmph, mm-haann Glen Lather mmmph both jobs too," he mumbled.

Dr. Bob has denied rumors there will be more such deals in Another full-contact sport on campus!

by Mac Husqvarna

The U of A will introduce labteksab, a new Australian game that has similarities to basketball, as an intersarsity sport for the 1989-90 academic year.

It uses the same rim and backboard as basketball does, but the netting is suspended upwards instead of downwards, as in basketball.

Other changes from basketball are the full body contact, much like in hockey, the lack of boundaries, allowing players to body-check opponents into the walls, and the biggest difference, once you get a chance at putting the ball into the basket, the ball must be punted upwards into the basket.

"It uses the physical style of hockey, the skill of basketball and the kicking skills of football, rugby and soccer," said labteksab coach Bruce Brareton. Brareton, an Australian, believes the game is so popular there because the lack of gravity on the "underside of the world."

"That's why Aussie rules balls travel so far," claims Brareton.

Canadians, however, have taken coolly to the sport.

the near future, although basketball coach Don Horwoud's name has been mentioned in a deal that would see him going to the Sacramento Bees for twenty-five bucks and two backboards.

Football mentor Jim-Don Levy is rumored to be going to Lower Mudbuck High in Lower Mudbuck, Texas for two first-round picks and a pair of snakeskin Tony Lamas. "We're holding out for handmade iguana, anyways," said Dr. Bob. "We have no intention of giving our staff away."

"I bet Dr. Naismith is turning over in his grave," said sports historian Leo Leclerque. "This isn't a sport. All this sport does is give kids a reason to boot the ball around the gym."

Since every gym isn't the same, there are no official court sizes. Thus Alberta's team would be tailored to the large Varsity Gym, while teams like Lethbridge and Calgary would be tailored to their own gyms.

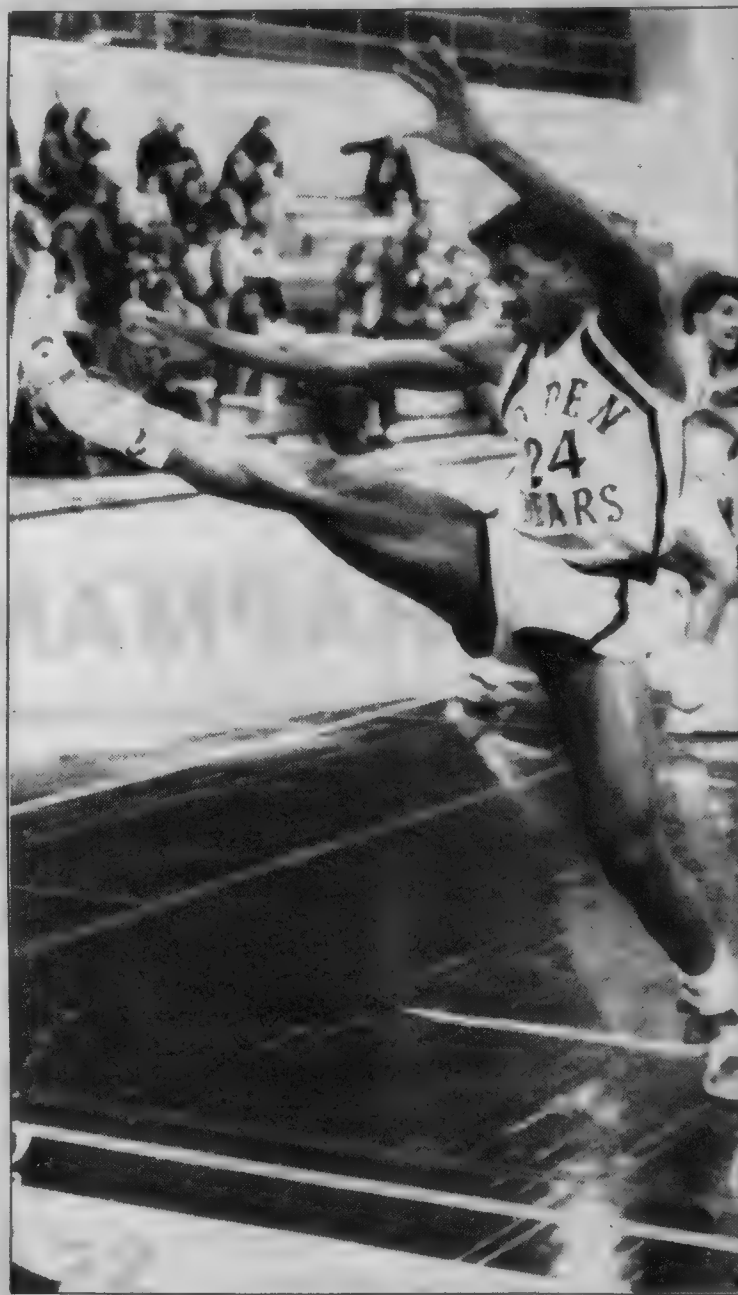

Notice how this "call-out" takes up oodles of space. Now you know how to do a campus sport section, too!

"It adds to the speculation and the hype," Brareton said, "and of course everyone knows that speculation and hype make the world go around."

The university labteksab will take place in March, so as to not compete with any of the established campus sports.

"We want to give the public a chance to experience the tradition of U of A labteksab," said Dr. Bob, the chairman of Alberta's department of Athletics.

It's up, it's good.

This Bear labteksab player punts a goal. The Bears won their exhibition game 6-2.

Kings full of spies

Another commie plan backfires

by G. Gordon Liddy

The Los Angeles Kings have Russian spies for an owner and leading scorer.

Reports from the official American news agency, V.P.U., are saying that Bernie Nicholls, who is off to a phenomenal start for the Kings, has been a KGB agent since birth, while McNall, a failed Los Angeles businessman who emigrated to the Soviet Union, has been an agent since 1980.

Nicholls, reportedly raised in Leningrad and schooled in the Soviet style of hockey until he was 15-years-old, was planted in Kingston, Ont., where he played junior hockey for the Kingston Canadians. He was scouted (presumably by another KGB agent posing as a Kings scout) and picked up by the Kings in 1988.

McNall, who lost an estimated $15 million from his childhood hobby — business of hockey card collecting, disgruntledly left the U.S. "for the Soviet dream" — to be a spy. Upon arriving in Moscow, he was immediately picked up and taught the ways of the KGB.

The plan was this: McNall would be supplied loads of cash which he would invest in certain L.A. businesses. His primary goal was to purchase the Kings — the team Nicholls was now playing for — and acquire NHL superstar Wayne Gretzky, no matter how high the price.

Here's where the story gets interesting. The KGB's reasoning behind the Gretzky 'deal' was to learn his style of play firsthand and teach Soviet players so they could win future Canada Cups and Rendez-Vous.

Their plan backfired, though.

The KGB had no idea that Nicholls would grow up to be such a prolific scorer, leaving Gretzky in the dust.

Now, according to reports from the official Soviet news agency, Tass, McNall is to trade Gretzky to the M-I-C-K-E-Y M-O-U-S-E New Jersey Devils for a fifth round draft pick, and bring Nicholls back to his home land.

Bitchin' Bears bomb Bisons

by Al Iterate

One wacky Wednesday won a wee bit of wonder for those bombastic bears this week. In a lucky lapse of location, the brutally booed bisons bit the big banana and gave up goal after gory goal, gloriously guiding the gleeful bears to a gruesome but grateful victory.

"Cranston could'a cut those crazy kooks like Christmas crackers" quipped the quintessential but queer coach Clare Cake "ceptin the slippery surface seemed to seduce his skates into sliding some seemingly super shots somewhat astray."

Heralding hockey hell, the helpless hammered herbivores succumbed to a senseless succession of psychotic, seemingly sentient skewed spheroids sent sequentially network.

Our hockey pool

by Big Small

Who needs the NHL? All the NHL does is give the Original Six Hockey League a great database for stats. Otherwise the league would draft Taro Tsujimoto from the Tokyo Katanas.

Some hockey pools just scratch the surface. This league states facts, while most hockey pools state opinions and think of them as facts.

Not just any hockey pool turns normally sane people into hockey trading maniacs. Let's take a look at the 17 teams, some of which are powerhouses, while others are just houses (and condemned ones at that).

We're forcing you to read about our hockey pool

Howe Division

The Purina Boners - The Bernie and Stevie Show. As they go, so go the Boners. Right now they're the hottest players in the NHL. Throw in prison parolee Manson, and you've got the best team in the league.

The Fuddpuckers - Steady as she goes Mr. Sulu. They haven't made a trade yet. If you had this team (Tikkanen, Neely, Coffey) you wouldn't make any either.

The Fifth Line - Rob Brown looks to be the steal of the year. If Richer comes back from his suspension hot, look out. This team could win it all.

The Brontos - They've been lucky to have Joe (Stik-Sak)ic. Car's been Propped up on blocks for a while. Take it to Mr. Loob.

The Ostasausages - With Simpson and Nieuwendyk, and Ray Bourque, what else can you ask for? Blaine will be asking for first place, but he won't get it. Peter Sieveorkowicz will revert back to his old AHL self pretty soon.

Flugels from Hell - When you have Mario Lemieux, you can't afford anybody else that can play well. This team found out and Pittsburgh will too.

The Unfed - The Muni Meter is stuck on two. Don't expect it to go much higher. Traded Mike Bullard away one week before the Blues did, and made a good deal turn sour.

The Chainsaws - Despite being second last in the division in forward goals and assists, he still can't find room for team captain Keith Crowder. This chainsaw needs some oil and an overhaul fast.

The Flyers - Seemingly have a good lineup (Makela, Gartner, Federko, Eklund, McKegney, Driver). Who would have guessed they would all have bad years at the same time. Forward assists is the only category they finish better than eighth.

Orr Division

The Slip Kids - What do Messier, McClelland, McPhee, McBain, and Troy Murray have in common besides the letter M? They're all Minus. Call them the McMinus Kids. Not much else to complain about, they lead the division.

The Strawberrys - Would-be GM's read: Would you trade four draft picks for Terry Carkner? Would you trade Dave Taylor for Jimmy Carson and two picks?

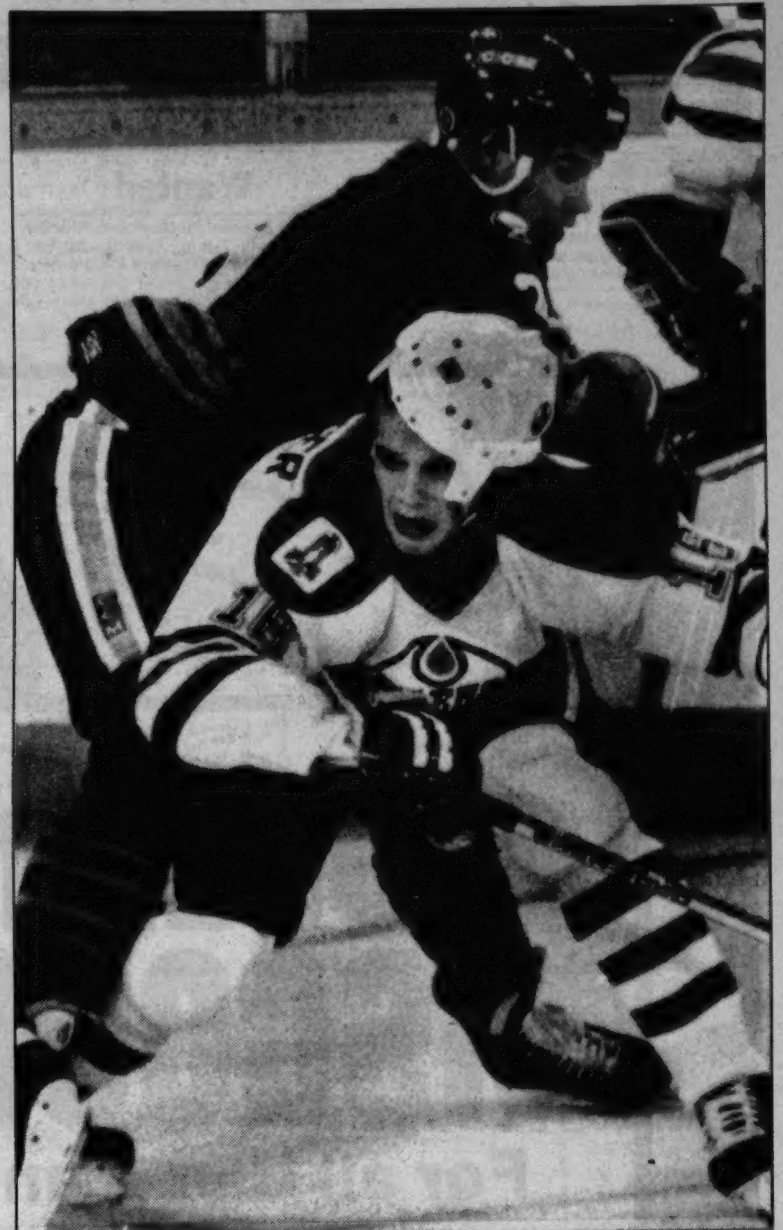

This team did both. Only seven players remain from the original 18 player squad.

The Generators - Luc Robitaille leads the charge here, having been acquired last season for Dave Poulin (believe it or not). This team needs better production from Petr Klima and Neal Broten to be able to move up to the Howe division for next year. Another team that can't be trusted to make the right trade all the time (he traded Hakan Loob on a 20 cent contract last season) he'll either win big or lose big.

The Small Leagues - They may regret sending Brian Bellows to the Chainsaws. Also dealt Ron Sutter to the 'Saws for aging veteran Rick Vaive, who last scored forty goals when he played for the Leafs on the Kid Line with Teeder Kennedy and Frank Boucher. Did manage to get Lyndon Byers from the 'Saws to toughen up an already fearsome forward set.

Says Byers, "nobody, but nobody makes fun of my name and gets away with it."

The French Connection - When your French Connection consists of Gilles Thibaudeau, Norm Lacombe, and Dan Vincelette, you're in big trouble. Even an overpaid Al MacInnis (or MaGinnis) will have trouble saving this team.

The Alcoholicks - If Dale Hawerchuk and Phil Housley go down, this team is history. Their next best player is Bob Errey, who's only claim to fame is that he plays with Mario and Rob Brown. John Tonelli may be the team MVP and he may also be out of hockey before 1990. Somebody send this team a care package.

The SS Minnows - They now have four number one draft picks, but have hurt themselves in the process. They traded Mark Howe for Tom Fergus and a number one pick. Fergus has since gone -27. Young talented set of forwards (Dampousse, Granato and Pierre Turgeon) still have to learn to come back and play defense. Minnows are still waiting for Luke (come over to the dark side) Richardson to learn the force from John (Obi-Wan) Brophy.

The Rink Rats - Does anything go right for these guys? In his first week as a Rat, Alain Chevrier lets in six goals for a 9.39 GAA. Their defence has scored only five times all year. They get the unenviable job of deciding whether to trade the league's number one pick next year.

Draft connoisseurs already know the great taste of Drummond Draft. If it bears the name Drummond you know it's quality beer.
